

A close-up photograph of a young girl with blonde hair, wearing a grey hoodie over a red shirt. She is gently holding a small, white bird, possibly a cockatiel chick, in her hands. The bird has a yellow patch on its wing.

A detailed historical painting from 1835 depicting a camel house. In the foreground, a man in a top hat and coat stands near a green fence, holding a small child. A woman in a red dress and bonnet stands beside him. In the middle ground, several camels are in their enclosure, including a large brown one and a white one. To the right, a zebra and other animals are visible. The background features a large building with a clock tower and a minaret, set against a backdrop of trees and birds.

Negev-Nahalat Eran

A village in every sense of the word, the facility is currently home to over 140 young people who are encouraged to develop a greater degree of independence in order to become productive members of Israeli society. It provides a continuum of residential care for children with complex disabilities as they grow from adolescents into young adults, and empowers them to interact with the outside world, develop a greater degree of independence and live quality lives while realizing their full potential.

Quality of life issues have also been taken into consideration. The Village features large parks and lounge areas for the residents to enjoy as well as plenty of grassy areas adjoining the living quarters.

"The mini-zoo gives me light, I feel light in my heart when I enter the mini-zoo. There are many animals that I love there, and when I saw them for the first time I felt light in my heart and was very happy"
